Delicious Int'l Food Conference 2007

A total of 9 people, 7 LGC juniors with Prof. Martin and Prof. Louisa, went to Seoul to attend 'Food Week 2007' on Saturday, November 24th. Food Week 2007 is the biggest food exhibition in the second half of the year and it offers people who work in the food industry valuable information.

There were 680 booths representing 330 enterprises such as Hauzen, that sells home appliances, or booths for unrefined rice wine (Mak-gul-li). There were also major events for people to participate in such as a foreigners' cooking tournament and a sausage making contest for anybody.

Tess Jung (22), junior, said that she expected a lot from this conference since it was about international food. When she arrived at the site, there was not only much food but also many home appliances, so she thought that it would provide helpful information for homemaking mothers, too. To her, the most impressive thing was an event introducing Korean beef cattle to people including a live calf. She also thought that participating as a volunteer seemed more interesting than just visiting because volunteer work is more valuable experience in her opinion. It is recommended for college students to gain valuable and various experiences by visiting external conferences when they have a chance.

LGC Students Organize Chapel Service

On Tuesday, November 20th LGC students took the lead in the English Chapel by performing a song and short drama, and showing our LGC life with a video clip. The whole performance ran for about 20 minutes at Sungji auditorium. They had been preparing for 2 weeks, the hardest part being the special music performance. It was really hard to gather all students and practice because each one had a different schedule. However, it was meaningful to have a chance to sing together in Chapel. The short drama was about several students who were interested in English and their English ability improves with international sense through the English-Only Policy of LGC and with the help of foreign professors. A 15-minute video briefly showed LGC life in 2006 such as the USA Trip with Prof. Todd, the Sports Festival with Prof. Jaclyn, and Cultural night held at the English Café.

Although it was only one hour, we could introduce LGC to students from different departments more effectively and it was a great chance for LGC to become one, too.

Voices of LGC Exchange Students

There are 2 exchange students at LGC this semester, Victoria and Christine. We asked them to tell us about their life in Korea and LGC. Let's listen to them.

Victoria Jiang is a junior from Nanjing University, China majoring in Public Administration. She came to Korea last spring and has gone through not only great experiences, but also many negative experiences. She has even experienced annoying and disappointing things; but she is considering those as good lessons for being a flexible and understanding person. She said "I thought LGC might be the same as other departments at Hannam; but once I got inside, I found that LGC follows a western education system which impressed me a lot. And I expected that LGC students would have a higher English ability." After she goes back to China, she will be studying English for TOEFL, Japanese, her major courses that she has missed, and also preparing for the GMAT later.

Christine Ikiat, is a junior from Kumi University, Uganda, majoring in Development Studies. She has been here as an exchange student in LGC since 2007 fall semester and has been studying and experiencing many different subjects so far. She especially feels that Korean is a pretty interesting language even if she doesn't take any regular Korean classes but only small lessons. She wants to make more relationships with not only LGC students but also any other Koreans. She said "Koreans might learn how to open their minds with global thinking and their attitudes need to be more globalized if they want to have many different foreigners in this 'global' college." She is going to stay in Korea for a year and then go back to Uganda. She is the first one this year to challenge the ethnic cultural variety. These two exchange students are wishing LGC to have a broader mind and try harder to become global talents which is also what LGC basically pursues. Therefore, we all need to listen to people from outside of LGC who are speaking objectively.

Hannam picks new Student President

The Central Election Management Committee announced the result of the election for Hannam Student President, Joon-young Jo (25), English Language and Literature major and Student Vice-president, Young-Joong Yoon (27), Department of Design. I met President-elect Joon-young Jo and asked several things.

Lauren(L): Congratulations! How does it feel to be selected as the next Hannam student president?

Joon-young(J): I feel excited to work with what I have desired and planned which is changing Hannam.

L: How long have you been preparing for this election?

J: I remember I started actually working for this since last May.

L: You must have experienced difficulties while preparing for this. What are they?

J: Two other candidate teams had already been candidates before, but this was the first time for me. I was worried that I would be lacking in popularity to be elected. Also the others were experienced already, so that made me work harder.

L: What are the differences between before and after your election?

J: There are a lot, but if I must choose, I'll say I got heavier responsibility. Externally there are many companies and even political organizations I have to deal with.

L: What would you like to accomplish in 2008?

J: I just want to be speaking for the entire Hannam students' collective opinions and build trust between students, the student council, and the university. I believe that trust would be the basis for stepping forward to the future.

L: What do you think makes a 'true leader'?

J: I consider leaders as those who collect thousands or millions of voices and speak for them with one voice.

L: I hope you will achieve everything that you hope for. Thank you.

President-elect Joon-young Jo has been working a lot with LGC in 2007 while he was student president of the Liberal Arts College. He tried to get together with LGC whenever his College had big events. He believes that LGC should be officially recognized by the student council as one of the Colleges of Hannam University.

The Frontier: Volunteer club

6 LGC students organized 'The Frontier' and started their activities of volunteering and studying together. So far it has been successful in that an additional 2 members have joined from this semester. Their major activity is one-to-one English tutoring of students in Jahyewon once a week. They have a regular meeting every Tuesday at 11 a.m. in 'The frontier' room at the English café, to review what they had experienced last week. They also sometimes read and discuss articles from the Time magazine. As The Frontier's slogan is "challenge, passion and endeavor", the goal of this group is to continue in LGC and expand their volunteer work through agreements with other people and organizations who need their help. The representative,

Tyler, a junior, said "at the very first when I was planning to create this club, I hoped to find 'The Frontier' still active in LGC ten years later as I visited." The Frontier is planning to enroll new members at the beginning of the next semester March 2008. You can contact the representative, Tyler with this phone number: 010-3124-8794.

Ducks and Drakes

By Joon-hyun Park (Neo) Freshman

Maybe... at least 10 years ago, I used to go home on foot after school. Going home, some of my friends and I stopped at one point of the reservoir to find the best place to cast a rock on the calm surface of the water. Everybody was busy finding a very round, of course flat, and easy-to-grab stone for little kids. There was a bit of competition in it. How cute we were at those times! We threw the rocks at the same time. A whooshing sound followed. Circles spread until they touched the sides. It was really like magic because I could make a rock fly over the water. There's also a kind of competition to make one's rock fly longer with more hits over the water. Imagine it. The moment a black and brown rock touches the water and keeps hopping fast. Don't you have that memory? You remember it, right? I miss playing ducks and drakes.

E-mail from Montreat, S. Carolina

What a great day we had at Montreat!

We all met for lunch at noon at the Montreat College cafeteria.

Dr. Somerville came, former Montreat President Silas Vaughn and his wife Kathy, a professor friend from WCU (Western Carolina University) heading to Hannam to teach (Dr. Kevin Lee), and my friend from college, now Montreat professor, Kevin Auman. The stars of the day were our 4 Linton Global College students: Michelle(3), Jane(3), Hannah(3), and June(2). Our two gals (Hannah and Michelle) made it up from PC just fine, and I brought the WCU student (June) and Dr. Lee. After lunch we went to Betty Linton's house for desert, and shared all kinds of stories from Korea and Hannam. This was followed by a personal campus tour by our Hannam-Montreat student Jane!

This was truly a wonderful experience for these students to meet such wonderful people and spend time with them. Of course, the students could not possibly talk any faster in Hangul to each other to catch up on their new lives abroad here in USA ... so we decided to graciously overlook the LGC "English only policy" today!^^

I am glad to share this report with you, and soon we shall have photos to send as well! Today we learned that this is a small world in which we live, and we were so grateful to all be together again, on different soil!

The work you all do there definitely has an impact around the world..

May God continue to bless Hannam University!
